Participatory design: Enabling participation by focusing on learning.

We are in the middle of a crisis - the world is literally burning and the well-being of humans and more is drastically decreasing. To find suitable approach to this situation, I use design ethnographic and participatory approaches to understand learning and design to enable people to take the actions they need in the more-than-human world. More specifically, I develop further understanding of enabling participation in design, both human-centered but also the implications for more-than-human and embodied design.
